

SARAH MOORE

Dr. Sarah Moore is an Assistant Professor in the School of Health and Human Performance in the Faculty of Health at Dalhousie University. She is also a researcher and scholar at Dalhousie's Healthy Populations Institute. Dr. Moore's research promotes physical activity, sport, recreation, and play across the lifespan. She has a specific expertise in promoting physical literacy and physical activity in children and adolescents with chronic conditions and disabilities.

Dr. Moore recently conducted a study assessing the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the movement and play behaviours of children with disabilities and the role of the built environment.

RYAN SHAY

I was born in the small town of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Growing up I played high level hockey as well as any other sport i could get my hands on. I played Major Midget hockey in Bridgewater and Jr. C in Clare leading up to my car accident. In 2013 I sustained a C7/C8 spinal cord injury, leaving me with no movement or sensation from the chest down and limited hand function. Since then I have gone to two Canada Games (winning a medal at one), travelled internationally to numerous places for high level competition and training & competed for Team Canada at the 2014 IWAS World Jr. Championships, all of this in para-athletics short distance sprinting and throwing. I have recently taken a step back from competition, to help others who have physical disabilities similar to myself, over come obstacles and barriers in our communities to feel more included and successful, mainly in the area of sport and recreation.

STUART MCREYNOLDS

is a passionate advocate and champion for inclusion and is committed to challenging society's perception towards persons with disabilities and marginalized groups, and in positioning the true value of inclusion for all members of society. With extensive years of senior-level experience working in inclusion initiatives in Canada, New Zealand, United Kingdom and Europe, Stuart brings a unique global perspective to his current responsibilities as President & CEO. An innovative, strategic-thinker, Stuart leads people-focused organizations united in transforming communities into fully inclusive and accessible environments. Stuart holds a BA (Hons) degree in Sport & Leisure Management from Cardiff Metropolitan University in the U.K. and a Graduate Diploma in Secondary Teaching from the Auckland University of Technology in New Zealand. Stuart is also member of the Ontario College of Teachers.